

Show & Tell Run-of-Show

Host your own. Six people, ten minutes each, and three questions that keep the room honest. About ninety minutes.

The schedule

- 0:00 to 0:10. Opening: the format, the three questions, the two rules.
- 0:10 to 0:40. Slots 1 to 3: five minutes to show, five for questions.
- 0:40 to 0:50. Break.
- 0:50 to 1:20. Slots 4 to 6.
- 1:20 to 1:30. Close.

Who's showing

| Slot | Name | What they're showing | Field(s) |
|------|------|----------------------|----------|
|      |      |                      |          |
|      |      |                      |          |
|      |      |                      |          |
|      |      |                      |          |
|      |      |                      |          |

The two rules

- Questions, not advice. Nobody fixes anyone's work tonight.
- Unfinished is welcome. Half-done things get the best questions.

Before the night

- ☐ Six people confirmed, plus one backup
- ☐ A timer the whole room can see or hear
- ☐ The three questions written somewhere everyone can read them

The three questions

Ask only these. Anyone in the room can ask them, in any order.

1. What surprised you while you were making it?
2. What would you cut?
3. What did it borrow from another field?

Host script

Say it in your own words. These are starting points, not lines to read.

Opening: "Welcome. Tonight six people show something they made. Each gets ten minutes: five to show it and five for questions. We only ask three questions, and they're up there. Two rules: questions, not advice, and unfinished is welcome."

Handoff: "Thank you, _____. Next is _____, showing _____."

If a slot runs long: "One more question, then we'll move on."

Close: "That's six. If something tonight gave you an idea from outside your own field, write it down before you leave. That's the whole point."

After

What came up more than once tonight?
